DROPPING A CURE...

If people are finding empty cartons in Milam fields these days, it is because the screwworm problem among cattle now totals 16 known cases.

The cartons, probably labeled Mission Laboratories, are dropped from a plane and contain sterile flies which eliminate future generations of the problem.

Bill McCutcheon, Milam County agent, notes the 16 known cases are from around the county. It is, therefore, a problem for all of the owners of the some 72,000 cattle in Milam County.

He explains that two consecutive mild winters have allowed the migration northward from South Texas and Mexico. Without cold weather, he says, the screwworm larvae "cupate" in the soil or on animals and survive to infest later in the year.

About 10 years ago, this problem reached major proportions because of similar weather conditions in Central and North Texas, creating a regional need to combat it.

So a system of dropping the sterile flies was developed. Whole regions were saturated by airdrop along the Texas-Mexican border. And the system apparently was effective the first time it was generally used.

It is being employed again. Planes flying out of Temple are working this region of Texas, including Milam County. The program is now financed with federal funds.

Should we have a more severe winter next year, it is likely the infestation will be eliminated this far north in the state. It is apparently a more common problem in South Texas and Mexico.

It is one we can do without. It would seem the agriculture industry has enough problems, like most industries, dealing with the way things are.

NOW-NOW-NOW

It would particularly catch smaller operators or people with less experience who maintain a few head of cattle, McCutcheon says. The more professional cattlemen probably went through the experience 10 years ago.

NOW-NOW-NOW

We test now against yesterday to anticipate tomorrow.

Deposits Increase In 5 Milam Banks

Deposits in Milam County banks were up 6.5 million over last year according to the June 30 federal and state call for statements of condition.

All five banks in the county reported increases with Rockdale State Bank and Citizens National Bank showing gains of more than 2.2 million each.

The increases reflected a general uptrend in the economy of the Central Texas area. Banks in Milam, Bell and Falls counties showed a gain of 14.55 percent in deposits over the same date in 1971.

Alcoa Buys Site For Ore Supply In Laramie Mts.

PITTSBURGH, Pa. Aluminum Company of America has exercised an option to purchase a large Wyoming deposit of anorthosite, one of several alternates for bauxite as a source of alumina -- the ore from which aluminum is smelted.

Alcoa said the land area involved covers nearly 8,000 acres. The purchase was made as part of Alcoa's continuing long-range program of assuring adequate future resources of basic raw materials.

The company emphasized that its Wyoming property acquisition is a hedge against the future and does not imply any immediate plan to utilize anorthosite in place of bauxite.

The anorthosite deposit is in the Laramie Mountains, a range approximately 12 miles northeast of Laramie. The purchase price was not disclosed, but exceeds $1 million.

Anorthosite is a rock composed almost entirely of feldspar, a crystalline aluminum-bearing mineral abundant in this country and around the world. It is enormously more plentiful than bauxite, which has been found only in limited quantities within the United States.

Perrin Opens Medical Practice In Cameron

Dr. Douglas Perrin has opened temporary offices at St. Edward Hospital for a general medical practice in Cameron. He will move to new offices in the St. Edward Clinic as soon as that building is completed.

Dr. Perrin attended Cameron schools while his father, E. A. Perrin, was superintendent of schools, graduating from Yoe High School in 1939. He attended the University of Texas at Austin and graduated from Baylor University College of Medicine at Houston in 1945. He interned at Parkland Hospital, Dallas.

He spent two years in Yokohama, Japan as a medical officer in the U. S. Army of Occupation where he met his wife, Elaine, an army nurse and native of Sheffield, Pennsylvania.

The Perrins have four children. Terese is a senior at Texas Women's University School of Nursing and Pat attends the University of Texas School of Nursing at San Antonio. Sons Chris and Greg are students at the University of Texas, Austin.

FHA Loans 1.5 Million

Farmers Home Administration loaned $1,449,390. in Milam County during their fiscal year which ended June 30. The loan totals were almost equally divided between housing and rural water extension lines.

Cameron gained 22 houses or construction starts on homes through FHA loans during the fiscal year.

Henry Ivey, county FHA supervisor, said $626,910. was loaned to 65 parties for rural housing. This would include repairs, purchases of existing homes and new houses. He said the greater part of this figure was for new homes.

Three water corporations, Gause, Milano and Southwest Milam, gained $628,100. in loan funds for extensions of their lines. Ivey said the loan would bring water to an additional 358 rural residents in Milam County.

Ivey said their report showed a caseload of 391 borrowers. Of this total, he said 283 were rural housing (including Cameron) loans.

Crafts, Exercise In SHARP Pilot Program

By Marilyn Hauk

Fifteen Cameron special education students are attending Operation SHARP (Sports, Health and Recreation Program), a pilot program sponsored by the State Mental Health and Retardation Department.

Sessions in specially designed exercise and crafts are held Monday through Friday from 8:30 a.m. to 4 p.m. at the Special Education building on the Yoe High campus.

Max Shuemate, director of the local pilot program said SHARP is paying big dividends because it is keeping the youngsters busy during their vacation period and at the same time teaching them wholesome, character building recreation.

Shuemate and aids, William Whiteside and Helen Ortiz, received intensive training for the program during a three-day school at the Austin State Home in June. The local project, funded for a two month period, opened June 19.

Whiteside is on hand in the mornings to aid with games and exercise activities. A favorite among the youngsters is the dance session which starts the day. Parachute, Frisbee and baseball are among the games that take up the morning period.

One morning a week from 10 to 12 the children are treated to a swim and swimming instruction in the city pool.

Afternoons are devoted to crafts and art. Helen Ortiz aids in this activity. Pieces of scrap material, egg cartons, bits of string and other scrap items are turned into pictures and other craft objects.

Shuemate said more craft items of this nature are needed by the group. He said they may be left at the Special Education building during the day.

Another favorite time of the day is refreshment period. Though most of the expenses are covered by the budget, Shuemate said there is no allowance for refreshments. Anyone willing to donate snacks for the youngsters is asked to contact him.

Killer Kite

"Kite weather" sent eight-year-old Jimmy into an open field to try his luck. Using a thin copper wire for a string, he soon had his box kite scudding into the sky.

Then, tragedy. Jimmy's kite crossed a high-tension power line and deadly voltage crackled downward, killing him instantly.

Could the power company be held legally liable by the boy's family? In a court hearing, they blamed his death on the fact that the high-tension line had not been insulated.

However, the court held the company not responsible. The judge said Jimmy's use of copper wire instead of an ordinary string was too unusual to have been foreseen and guarded against.

Courts generally agree that power companies cannot be expected to take precautions against freak accidents. Nevertheless, since electricity is such a dangerous product, they do carry a higher-than-average burden of responsibility.

In another case, a boy's kite snagged on a power pole. When he climbed the pole to retrieve his kite, he touched an uninsulated line and suffered a bad burn.

This time, three factors weighed against the company:

- 1) that the pole was right next to a playground;
- 2) that it had low steps, easy for children to climb; and
- 3) that no DANGER signs had been posted.

A court duly awarded damages to the injured boy, saying that the company could fairly have foreseen this kind of an accident.

And tree climbing is even more foreseeable than pole climbing. Thus:

A boy got a shock from an uninsulated wire that passed through the upper branches of a tree in front of his house. Sued later for damages, the power company pointed out that there was nothing in the tree—no snagged kite, no frightened kitten, no tempting fruit—that would justify the boy's venture into the treetop.

But the court held the company liable anyhow, for misjudging human nature.

"The immemorial habit of small boys to climb trees," said the court, "is a habit which corporations stretching their wires over such trees must take notice of."

Mustang Isle 'Binding Obligation

By Bill Boykin
Texas Press Association

AUSTIN
The Parks and Wildlife Commission handed one controversial issue back to the Attorney General and was handed another one by the Legislature.

PWC voted four-to-two to ask Atty. Gen. Crawford C. Martin to review and reconsider a May 26 ruling that a 1970 contract to purchase 3,965 acres of Mustang Island property for park development is a "binding obligation."

Martin's opinion, according to PWC Chairman Jack Stone of Wells, is expected in about a week.

The Mustang Island battle has raged from Austin to Washington and back and through the federal courts and has figured in battles over Senate confirmation of PWC members.

Legislators in special session, thwarted long-standing plans of the State Highway Department to build a 10-story, $20 million headquarters building on a block near the capitol and governor's mansion.

Instead, the Legislature decreed, the Parks and Wildlife Department would purchase with $1.5 million from its cigarette tax the barren, dusty block in downtown Austin and convert it into a park.

The highway agency, conceded legislative leaders, was deliciously happy with the arrangement.

Under the circumstances, however, neither seemed to have much choice.

GAME LAW FUSS CALMED

Texas game wardens will no longer enforce state game and fish laws near the mouth and jetties of the Sabine River, an area of disputed ownership with Louisiana.

Louisiana last month threatened to appeal to the U. S. Supreme Court Texas officers' attempts at enforcement in the area. Attorney General Martin informed Louisiana Atty. Gen. William J. Guste Jr. Texas will keep its commitments in the disputed areas of the Gulf south of the Sabine River mouth.

The area was recently found by a Supreme Court-appointed master to belong to Texas, but Louisiana appealed the decision.

INFLATION STILL THREAT

Inflation is still a strong threat, though Texas is recovering from economic recession, according to a University of Texas Bureau of Business Research study.

Unemployment remains high, says UT BBR, but estimated personal income rose nine per cent in the last year and bank debits 10 per cent.

The unemployment level, frowned on by the Bureau, was 3.8 per cent in May, which is lower than the 4.1 per cent of a year ago and considerably below the national 5.9 per cent rate.

Consumer spending and residential construction were seen as strong. The rate of the consumer price index rise slowed somewhat after the presidential price freeze, BBR found.

HIGHWAY WINS AWARD

Texas Highway Department received the National Safety Council Award of Honor for an outstanding occupational safety record during 1971.

"Less than five out of 1,000 of the nation's total number of work units meet the award of honor requirements," said Howard Pyle, National Safety Council President.

The Texas Highway Department got the award for a 52 per cent decrease in frequency and 42 per cent decrease in severity of accidents last year.

BEEF CATTLE LEADER

Texas is the nation's leader in all major categories of the beef cattle industry, Texas Agriculture Commissioner John C. White states. The livestock industry in Texas is a $2 billion industry, accounting for almost half the total agricultural income of the state. There were 12.8 million cattle and calves in Texas in January, more than five million head above second-ranked Iowa.

Texas ranks second in the nation in number of slaughter plants, third in cattle and calves slaughtered during 1971, third in sheep and lamb slaughter and 15th in hog slaughter.

Monkeys Studied For Drug Answer

NEW YORK

Forty-eight monkeys at the University of Michigan have been turned into junkies by scientists who want to understand man's dependence on drugs.

The 48 rhesus monkeys, living in rows of steel cages in a laboratory on the Ann Arbor, Mich., campus, are hooked up with tubes through which the drugs pass directly into the bloodstreams.

The monkeys must press a bar to get the drugs flowing into them, and the scientists keep increasing the number of times the bar must be pressed to learn how hard the monkeys will work to satisfy their habit.

Tests have shown the number of times a monkey will press the bar to get caffeine is 250. Caffeine is the drug used in coffee, tea, soft drinks and other foods consumed in western societies.

Monkeys given morphine, from which heroin is derived, will press the bar 3,000 to 4,000 times. Those wanting cocaine have pressed the bar as much as 10,000 times.

Scientists believe that cocaine does not cause physical dependence but its effect is so pleasurable it produces permanent psychological dependence.

The eight drugs tested on the monkeys were heroin, barbiturates, LD, nicotine, alcohol, marijuana, cocaine, and amphetamines.

Caffeine seemed to be least harmful. Tests indicated psychological dependence was mild and physical dependence was nil. The monkeys, however, showed signs of tolerance—the more caffeine they got the more they wanted.

Marijuana was rated as moderate in psychological dependence and produced no physical dependence. It was the only drug tested that produced no tolerance.

Psychological dependence was rated as strong in the other six drugs and three of them, alcohol, barbiturates, and heroin, produced physical dependence.

The scientists refused to draw firm conclusions on how these tests related to humans. They pointed out, however, that monkeys have been used for many years to learn about humans in several fields.

They said all the monkeys became addicted to the same drugs that addict people. The animals' reactions were similar, such as drowsiness or excitability, depending on the drug used. Drugs not habit-forming to humans do not addict the monkeys.

Another Additive....

Another wildcat has been started in Milam County in yet another formation.

This is a significant effort in a significant year for the oil industry. For the first time since World War II's end, 100 percent production is allowed.

An energy crisis is developing in this country. The Middle East oil is subject to nationalization as well as Arab-Israeli politics. Alaskan oil exploration is being slowed by a fight over ecology of that northern land.

Wildcat prospecting has been underway in Milam County and this part of Central Texas for 50 years. Once in a while, a good well comes in. But our economic life has yet to see outflow that all of the drilling might have produced.

Perhaps the law of averages is catching up and we shall see this additional economic factor as a plus in the Milam area.

It would be another nice additive.

Comeback....

There's a romantic lift to the story of the return of the ospreys to Scotland.

The osprey or sea eagle had long been considered extinct in Britain. Up until 1959 no osprey had been sighted there for 50 years. Then a pair of the birds turned up in Scotland and this year eight or nine pairs are estimated to have mated there.

Special precautions have been taken to protect the nest of a pair whose eggs were stolen last year. A corps of 150 volunteers keeps a day and night watch over the nest, which straddles the top of a 40-foot tree in a bird sanctuary on Loch Garten. Electronic devices pick up the sound of any intruder. Intrigued by the story hundreds of bird lovers are trekking to the sanctuary to view the comings and goings of the ospreys from a concealed vantage point.

The public interest and share in protecting the birds is a source of encouragement for the conservationists. It points to the underlying fact that there is an unlimited fund of goodwill to be tapped for the fight to save endangered wildlife.

Peasant Recalls River Disaster

By James Pringle
Reuter Correspondent

HUA YUAN JUO, CHINA
For Shao Shih-Ching, a peasant in a peoples commune, the yellow river is truly "Chinas Sorrow," as it has been known for centuries.

Shao, who tills the fields beneath the great stone and earth dykes lining this elevated, mud-colored river, still vividly recalls the colossal man-made disaster that occurred here 34 years ago.

Now aged 61, he is one of the few living witnesses to it.

In 1938, he stood huddled with 14 other members of his family as the dykes were blown open with a mighty roar, and water cascaded toward thousands of unsuspecting villages.

The breach in the dykes was ordered by Kuomintang Gen. Shang Chen, acting on order of the Nationalist high command, to halt the advance of Japanese troops across China.

The Japanese push was delayed three months at a cost phenomenal even in a land and a region used to calamity.

It is estimated now that 890,000 people were drowned as the waters swirled through 11 towns and villages in 22 counties.

Shao himself was ordered from his village with pick and shovel to begin the work of demolition.

The mere thought of tackling the dykes as anathema to the peasants.

The Chinese regarded the Yellow River, with affection, but with fear.

From time immemorial, it has burst its banks, causing untold disaster and suffering.

Shao, standing on the spot where the breach was made, recalled that he and other peasants refused at first to obey the soldiers of the Nationalist new eighth division.

He still carries the scars on his hands where he was beaten.

After two or three days work, when all Nationalist soldiers had reached safety, dynamite was inserted and the dykes blown.

Shao said no attempt was made to warn the peasants in the path of the waters.

"Only those lucky enough to be living near the dykes knew what was going on," he said.

For days hundreds of peasants families huddled on the dykes above the swirling water, aware their ordeal was not yet over.

"We cursed the Kuomintang troops," said Shao, in his thick Honanese accent.

"You do not fight the Japanese but you kill the common people," the peasants told the soldiers who departed on boats.

Shao said a few days after the breach there was not even a tree to be seen in the whole area.

"In my family of 15 people, seven were starved to death, including my father and uncle," Shao recalled.

After the fall of Japan, Kuomintang forces came back again in 1946.

Shao said they forced the peasants to fill in the breach in the dykes, so that the river would revert to its old course and flood areas downstream held by the communists.

The waters gradually receded, leaving behind huge ponds, some as deep as 40 feet.

Asked where his old village had been situated, Shao pointed. "It was there, a few hundred meters away," he said.

There was only a rice paddy, some fallow fields, and a pond.

Childrens Lives Are Learning Adventure

COLLEGE STATION
Questions about nature tumble from a child.

"Grass smells funny. What makes it grow? Why does it tickle?"

The world is a bulging, breathing puzzle to the wide-eyed child, who is constantly learning to "see" through his eyes, touch, smell, hearing and taste, according to Jane Fleischer, specialist in family life education with the Texas Agricultural Extension Service.

Miss Fleischer urged that parents tap this natural curiosity of a child and create a learning adventure.

"Learning comes through doing," she said. "Awareness, curiosity, understanding and independence can work to help the child discover learning adventures if you take time to show him the way," she said.

The Texas A&M University specialist explained that plopping down in a woods, park or meadow and listening to nature can stimulate a child's awareness of bird calls, insects and animals. Instruct him to sit completely quiet for sixty seconds with no moving or talking. Then discuss what he's heard.

"From a hilltop pause with him and notice colors in the distance," she added. "Ask how many different shades of green he can spot. Stroll through the woods and ask how many smells he can distinguish. Point out odors of freshly-cut grass and hay."

Miss Fleischer suggested going on texture hunts. Take time to talk about objects the child sees -- things that feel soft and furry, smooth, coarse, sharp, wet and dry.

New Roles For Medic Assistants

By Vergil Berger
Reuter Correspondent

GENEVA, Switzerland

More than half of the world's people still have no access to any health care -- and the most important single role in the effort to provide universal care may belong to the medical assistant, according to the World Health Organization (WHO).

WHO says the medical assistant is perhaps the most indispensable man in public health today.

World Health, the WHO's official monthly magazine, devoted its June issue to a study of the assistant's role, not only in developing countries but in such wealthy nations as the United States, where he is seen as a possible answer to a chronic shortage of doctors.

The medical assistant is known by many names around the world -- the Medex in the United States, the Feldsher in the Soviet Union, the Barefoot Doctor in China, the Hakim in the Arab world, the Officier de Sante in France, the Behdar in Iran.

Duties vary from one country to another, but in most countries medical assistants have the following features in common: they are neither doctors nor nurses, but health workers with eight or nine years of basic general education followed by two or three years of technical training.

Their training should enable them to recognize the most common disease, treat the simpler ones and refer more complicated problems to the nearest health center or hospital, carry out preventive measures, and promote health in their districts.

Dr. Daniel Flahault, who heads the international agency's program to train auxiliary personnel, says in World Health that there is a world-wide shortage of doctors.

Twenty countries have only one doctor for every 25,000 to 75,000 people. Some have only one for every 150,000 to 200,000 of their population. At the other extreme, some countries have one doctor for less than 1,000 people -- although even their needs are not always fully met since the doctors are concentrated in big cities.

This is why the doctor should no longer be considered the sole provider of medical care, but as leader of a team with the medical assistant acting both as his helper and sometimes as a substitute for him, Flahault said.

The role of the trained medical assistant is particularly important in rural areas -- and 71 per cent of the world's population still live in rural areas or small towns or less than 20,000 inhabitants, he said.

In country areas, because of their isolation and dispersed population, the work of doctors is difficult and expensive.

The growing tendency of doctors to specialize makes general practitioners increasingly rare and this creates a void which the medical assistant must fill, Flahault said.

Much of the doctor's work can be delegated to suitably trained assistants.

Flahault asked whether it made sense to bury a physician in some remote spot without the minimum facilities needed for the proper utilization of his skill -- an x-ray machine, efficient transport, an adequate supply of drugs, laboratory facilities, a hospital.

Better to employ auxiliary staff -- and easier, Flahault said.

Recruitment standards for such staff can be lower, the training period shorter, and their social, material and status expectations are generally less ambitious, he said.

Flahault pointed out that countries as different as the United States, Algeria, and the Territory of Papua-New Guinea have all in recent years had recourse to various types of medical assistants in order to support and to some extent take the place of the qualified doctor.

Australian Mine Interests Threatened By Aborigines

By Bruce Jones
Reuter Correspondent

CANBERRA

Australia's 150,000 Aborigines are giving the government a headache with a continuing campaign to get title rights to ancestral land threatened by mining development.

For the past five months a group of educated Aborigines -- descendants of the continent's original inhabitants before European settlement 200 years ago -- have defied the government to dramatize their cause by squatting on the lawns of Parliament House here.

On Jan. 26 -- the anniversary of the setting up of the first settlement -- they set up an embassy in a tented encampment in front of Parliament House.

A letter to Queen Elizabeth points out that Aborigines are the only indigenous people of the British Commonwealth who have not been granted legal title to traditional reserve lands or compensation in some form for those lands not returnable.

It asks that Australia's northern territory, which contains the large Arnhem Land Aboriginal Reserve, should be made a state within the Commonwealth of Australia with representation in the federal parliament. It is at present administered from Canberra.

The letter says this would assure Aborigines of having a say in government in the only place where they were ever likely to have it.

It also asks for legal title and mining rights to all other reserve lands in Australia and for the preservation of all Aboriginal sacred sites. Particularly in the northern territory, these lands include many uranium leases.

Compensation for lands not returnable, the letter says, should take the form of a negotiable first installment and a negotiable percentage of Australia's gross national income, which they would use to develop the northern territory where many of the Aborigines live. Apart from their lack of title to land, Australia's Aborigines have longstanding grievances against what the council for Aboriginal affairs has called the vicious circle of paternalism, dependence and pauperism since the first settlers came to their homeland 200 years ago.

Health officials from the northern territory disclosed in May that 40 per cent of all Aboriginal deaths occur during the first year of life, compared with about four per cent for Australia as a whole.

A large proportion of the survivors suffered from chronic chest and ear diseases and general malnutrition.

Mexico To Link Coasts With Rail

By Ernesto Mendoza
Reuter Correspondent

MEXICO CITY

After years of talking about building a canal across the country, Mexico is now considering a modern railroad instead to link the Atlantic and Pacific Oceans.

Long before the Panama Canal was built across Central America in 1914, the idea of digging a waterway across the 187 miles Tehuantepec Isthmus of Southern Mexico captured the imagination of dreamers and engineers.

A thin strip of land, north of the Panama Canal, the Isthmus has a big river on the Atlantic side and a large lagoon on the Pacific.

Now President Luis Echeverria has said: "There will never be a canal that will divide Mexico in two."

Advocates of the Tehuantepec Canal say it will cut by a week a ship's journey from one coast of the neighboring United States to the other.

They argue that the big volume of shipping in the Panama Canal makes the construction of another canal in the area necessary.

But critics say ships of the future will be so big that no canals can accommodate them. They point to Japanese supertankers as an indication of what future ships will be like.

Echeverria has committed himself to modernizing the existing railway which links the free ports of Coalzacoalcos on the Gulf of Mexico and Salina Cruz on the Pacific.

A rail link, called the National Railway of Tehuantepec, was actually built in 1894 -- 20 years before the Panama Canal was completed -- but has now become obsolete.

Four trains, carrying passengers and goods, chug daily across the Isthmus at present, stopping at 43 stations, including the sulphur-mining town of Jaltilpan.

Food Situation Is Better In Cuba

By Charles Lambelin
Reuter Correspondent

HAVANA

Cubans can now buy more food and consumer goods than at any time in the past few years as the government of Fidel Castro moves to soak up excess money in circulation and create more incentive on the Caribbean island.

The development is also part of a plan to re-introduce some kind of material incentive for workers by distributing a limited amount of sought-after goods to the most deserving.

One pointed sign of the better position has been last week when Cubans were able for the first time in many years to buy about a pound of butter per family.

As further confirmation of the improved food distribution compared with two years ago, Havana housewives report a steadier supply of vegetables such as potatoes, beans and carrots, and of bananas.

Supplies of meat, rationed at less than a pound a week, are still irregular and salt -- especially in the rural areas -- is still in great demand. But the overall food position is clearly better.

Restaurants now often have roast pork on menus which once had only fish to offer and line ups for food and meals are much shorter.

A beach near the capital has unusually been offering visitors the choice of a self-service cafe with fish and rice dishes, a restaurant offering different kinds of spaghetti, a snackbar with sandwiches and a ice-cream parlor -- all within a stone's throw of each other.

Workers report that the food in their canteens has improved while rum, hitherto largely an export item, is again freely available at high prices. It is also easier to buy beer and soft drinks. Cubans, revelling in the new availability of consumer goods can be seen walking around the streets with their Russian-made transistor radios blaring out dance music.

To ensure an equitable distribution of the goods available, workers fill in forms at work saying what they would like to buy. The right to buy is then allotted according to availability and merit -- high production, family needs, special duties.

On offer are such things as television sets at 850 pesos (850 dollars at official rates), refrigerators at 550 pesos, wristwatches at 85 pesos, transistor radios, and sewing machines.

The official belief is that the availability of such goods, even if limited, will act as an incentive while at the same time deal with the question of too much money chasing too many goods and so creating inflation and a black market.

About three billion pesos are in circulation.

According to Castro in a May Day speech the government plans to take some 600 million pesos out of circulation this year.

About 13 per cent will be soaked up by price increases on non-essential goods and the balance by making more goods and services available.

Admitting that there was some black market in the country, Castro said such speculators would disappear with more products coming on to the market.

Castro reported that this year's tobacco harvest was 60 per cent better than last year's poor crop. Much of the extra production will go to export, but it also means freer sales at home, where cigarettes have been rationed in a country famous around the world for its cigars.

MENTAL HEALTH MATTERS

Chronic Drug Users?

The familiar claim that Americans have become chronic drug users does not appear to be valid, according to new research evidence.

A scientific study carried out by university, government, and psychiatric institute researchers challenges the claim and indicates that most Americans who do use psychotherapeutic drugs do not take them on a regular or long-term basis.

Instead, most people seem to be relatively conservative in their use both of prescription and over-the-counter psychotherapeutic drugs.

Unlike previous surveys based solely on drugstore records, data were obtained by interviewing a population cross-section of adults 18 and older, from whom the researchers drew a profile of usage patterns and reasons for drug use.

Studies have shown widespread acceptance and use of tranquilizers, anti-depressants, stimulants, sedatives, and barbiturates; and some 178 million prescriptions were filled in U.S. drugstores in 1967.

But the new sampling of American households revealed that, among the users (45 percent of the women and 33 percent of the men interviewed) about one in five had taken drugs on a regular daily basis for six months or longer.

An important issue in the study was the extent to which persons become involved in using psychotherapeutic drugs. On this point, the survey showed that regular long-term use is most likely to occur among those for whom drugs are prescribed by a physician.

Prescription drug takers who use non-medical sources (relatives and friends) were not likely to use the drugs regularly.

Drugs most likely to be used by men on a long-term daily basis were the sedatives, mainly phenobarbital. Women, on the other hand, are most likely to use minor tranquilizers over a long period of time.

Nationally, according to the researchers, the use of minor tranquilizers is much more frequent than use of stimulant drugs.

Three Students Selected For Farm Bureau Seminar

Three high school students from Milam County will attend the tenth annual High School Students Citizenship Seminar to be conducted by the Texas Farm Bureau July 18-22 on the Campus of Baylor University in Waco, according to Edwin Lehmann, President of the County Farm Bureau.

Students selected to attend from this county include: Randy Tumlinson, of Cameron; Jan Willingham, of Milano and Alva Ray Mullinax of Cameron.

They will be among some 450 students from all over the State who will be entering the 11th or 12th grades in September and have been screened as to leadership ability and scholastic achievement.

Attendance is not limited to students from Farm Bureau families, but is open to those who reside in towns or cities as well as rural areas. Their attendance is sponsored by the local County Farm Bureau.

Purpose of the seminar, according to Lehmann, is to convey to the students a better understanding of our American heritage and the capitalistic private enterprise system "that has made ours the greatest of all nations."

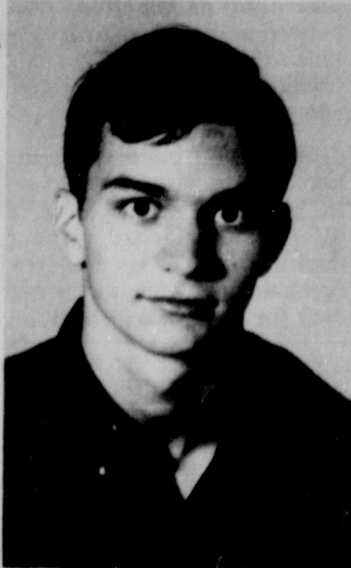

Several nationally-known authorities will be discussion leaders at the seminar. They include Dr. Clifton Ganus, president of Harding College, Searcy, Ark.

Cleon Skousen, lecturer, author of "The Naked Communist" and other publications, and former FBI Agent, of Salt Lake City, Utah, Tom Hollingworth, Tulsa Okla., former member of the Green Berets, Dr. C. L. Kay, assistant president of Lubbock Christian College, Lubbock.

Renner Lovegrass Seed Now Available

RENNER

Planting seed of new Renner lovegrass is now available from the 1972 seed harvest at Texas Research Foundation. The supply will be limited again.

Normal processing of the seed is underway for farmers and ranchers who wish to make plantings now, in the fall, or who want to lay in adequate supplies for 1973.

"The palatable, wide-leaf lovegrass strain has been seeded this spring in at least 70 counties in Texas and in four other states," said S. H. Whitehurst, Administrator of the Foundation. The figures are based on distribution of the initial release of Renner lovegrass seed made last fall.

It is noteworthy that livestock operators are planting the new crop in nearly one-third of all Texas counties the first year it is available. Whitehurst commented.

One of the surprising traits in Renner lovegrass is the ease of getting a stand, and the lower seeding rate needed compared to Ermelo lovegrass. A planting rate of one pound to the acre is adequate when planted in rows.

Benny J. Simpson, farm superintendent and senior soil scientist, says that the current seed harvest will be of high quality. There will be a 10-pound minimum on seed orders.

Renner lovegrass proved to be an outstanding forage that beef producer in test acreages in Oklahoma and Texas in 1971, according to Whitehurst. Green forage in one season's growth averaged 14,000 pounds per acre. Beef produced was 408 pounds per acre in 179 days, in evaluation tests at Renner.

The new grass was selected because of its high palatability, wide leaf and upright growth. It is described as a bunch-type grass with bluegreen color. It is easily identifiable as a different species from weeping lovegrass, including Ermelo lovegrass, Simpson pointed out. It may be used for livestock grazing from early spring to summer, in the fall, or as field cured forage for wintering of mature beef cattle without hay.

Renner lovegrass is recommended for statewide use, in a variety of soils. It may be planted in June if moisture is available and weeds are not a problem, in the fall, or in the spring. It may be seeded in small grain stubble, providing that moisture is ample.

The grass is planted with conventional seeders, including the Brillion, Cyclone seeder and Planet Jr. vegetable seeder, either broadcast or in rows.

Do not attempt to cover the seed, advised Simpson. The seed should be left on the top of the seedbed and pressed lightly into the surface. The bed should be weed-free and very firm. Cultipacking before and after seeding is advised.

Interested producers may receive information on the immediate delivery of Renner lovegrass by writing to Texas Research Foundation, Box 43, Renner, Texas 75079.

TFB Leader Hits Meat Quota Lift

WACO

TFB President J. T. (Red) Woodson has called President Nixon's decision not to impose a freeze on raw agricultural products, "a just action."

However, the farm and ranch leader expressed concern over the President's recent removal of all quota restrictions on U. S. meat imports.

"The U. S. quality and health standards for meat products are very high," Woodson explained, "and we are concerned that imports may not meet the national standards." Woodson said: "The housewife deserves top quality meat at the market counter. She has a right to know where the meat she buys comes from and that it is the very best quality."

The Farm Bureau President also pointed out that increased meat imports could lead to depressed prices of U. S. meat products and that President Nixon will have to accept responsibility for any economic imbalance which may result from his decision.

Nixon's new import policy, combined with the current drought situation existing in many areas of Texas, may mean severe hardship for local ranchers. "It would be a serious matter if weather conditions force livestock producers to sell in a market already depressed by excessive imports," Woodson said.

"Furthermore, President Nixon's order to lift meat import restrictions does not strike at the basic cause of inflation," Woodson concluded. "The real cause is government spending and what is needed to cure inflation is sound fiscal policies by the Federal Government."
